General Information and Field Trip Ideas

Warren monument on Little Round Top, Gettysburg

Following his victory at Chancellorsville, Va., in May 1863, Robert E. Lee decided to take his Confederate army, and the war, to the north.

Union cavalry discovered the movement and nearly defeated J.E.B Stuart at Brandy Station near Culpeper June 9. But Lee stuck to his plan, marching the bulk of his army north through the Shenandoah Valley. Several battles were fought along the way, but Lee continued north toward Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. On June 28 Lee was in Chambersburg. Learning Union forces had crossed the Potomac and were in pursuit, the Confederate commander ordered his army to concentrate. Three days later elements of the armies met at Gettysburg.
